

A Parent's Guide to Starting Music Lessons

For kids ages 5-9

Now Is The Perfect Time

If you're reading this, you're already doing something right.

Most parents feel unsure about when to start music lessons. They worry about timing, cost, and adding one more thing to an already busy schedule.

This guide is here to help with exactly that. We'll walk you through how to know if your child is ready, how to choose an instrument, and what to realistically expect from lessons.

There's no perfect age and no rush. You're not behind. You're in the right place.

When to start

Clear signs that your child is ready for music lessons

Choosing an instrument

How to pick which one is right for your kid

What to expect

A realistic look at time, practice, and cost

One of our students playing piano at a student showcase.

How to Know If Your Child Is Ready

Readiness for music lessons isn't about natural talent or being able to sit still for long periods. It's about curiosity, interest, and a supportive environment. If your child shows any of these signs, they're likely ready to explore music in a structured way.

Curious about music

Asks questions, notices instruments, or wants to explore where sounds come from.

Enjoys music

Sings along to songs, moves to music, or lights up when their favorite songs are playing.

Can engage briefly

Look for 5-7 minutes of engagement during something they enjoy. Music has a way of drawing out focus in kids who struggle to find it elsewhere.

Expresses interest

Interest often shows up quietly, like tapping rhythms, pretending to play, or lingering around instruments.

Kids today have less passive music exposure than ever. Help your kid by putting music on in the car, during chores, or pull up a live performance on YouTube. See what catches their attention.

Choosing the Right Instrument

Choosing an instrument doesn't have to be a big decision. Most kids start with what feels interesting.

If your child is naturally drawn to something, that's a great place to start. Getting started matters more than getting it perfect.

These instruments are common starting points

Piano

Great for kids who enjoy patterns, structure, and visual learning. Builds a strong foundation.

Violin

A Great for kids who enjoy focus and precision. Builds listening skills and ear training.

Drums

A natural fit for energetic kids who like movement and rhythm. Builds coordination.

Ukulele

Ideal for kids who want an easy instrument to start with. It is small, simple, and fun to play.

→ These three tend to be best for ages 5–7 because kids are typically smaller with shorter arms and fingers.

Guitar

Good for kids who enjoy songs and hands-on learning.

Saxophone

Great for kids drawn to bold sounds and melody. Encourages creativity.

Flute

A good option for kids who enjoy lighter sounds and control. Builds breath awareness.

Trumpet

Well-suited for kids who like strong, clear sounds. Builds breath control.

Centre Music House offers lessons on 15+ different instruments. These eight are some of the most common and flexible places for kids to start.

What to Expect

Understanding what music lessons actually require helps you plan with confidence. Here's what to expect when it comes to time, practice, progress, and cost.

Weekly Lessons

Most beginner lessons are 30 minutes per week. This length works well for young children and fits into most family schedules.

Practice at Home

Aim for 10–25 minutes, 3–5 times per week. Consistency matters more than perfection. Short, regular practice builds skills over time.

Early Progress

Expect small wins in the first few months like simple songs, recognizing notes, and growing confidence. Progress is gradual.

Cost Expectations

Most lessons cost $175–$250 per month, including your weekly lesson and sometimes recitals. Budget for materials like books and reeds, and ask about instrument rentals if you're just getting started.

Trial Lesson

Meet teacher and try basics

First Month

Weekly lessons begin

Home Routine

Short practice builds skill

Early Progress

Small wins build motivation

In the beginning, you're part of the lesson. Sitting in on practice and showing genuine interest in what they're learning gives your child the confidence to keep going. You don't need to know music. Just show up.

What a Good First Lesson Should Feel Like

A quality first lesson should feel welcoming. Your child should leave feeling curious and encouraged. And you, as a parent, should feel informed and confident about what comes next.

For Your Child

- The teacher greets them warmly and learns their name
- They get to touch and explore the instrument right away
- The lesson feels playful and engaging, not rigid or boring
- They are encouraged for trying, not corrected harshly
- They leave excited to come back

For You as a Parent

- The teacher explains what to expect in clear, simple terms
- You're invited to ask questions and share concerns
- The environment feels safe, organized, and professional
- You understand the next steps without feeling pressured
- You leave feeling confident it's a good fit for your family

One of our students getting ready for a student showcase performance with his teacher, Forrest.

Thoughtful instruction prioritizes comfort, engagement, and clarity.
A good teacher meets your child where they are and builds from there.

Smart Questions to Ask

Ask the right questions and you'll feel more confident choosing a music program. Use this list to help evaluate options and find the best fit for your child and family.

What is the teacher's experience with young beginners?

Look for instructors trained to work specifically with children ages 5–9.

What does the lesson schedule look like?

Understand lesson frequency, length, and policies for cancellations or makeups.

What curriculum or method do you use?

Ask how lessons are structured and what materials are recommended.

How do you keep young kids engaged?

Good beginner teachers use games, movement, and short activities to match a child's attention span.

How do you handle a child who loses motivation?

A strong teacher knows how to adjust pacing, choose better songs, and keep learning fun.

Can we try a trial lesson first?

A trial lesson lets you and your child experience the program before committing.

These questions empower you to make an informed decision. A good music school will welcome your questions and answer them clearly.

Taking the Next Step

You've learned what readiness looks like, how to choose an instrument, what to expect from lessons, and what questions to ask.

The next step is simple: Book a trial lesson with Centre Music House!

What a Trial Lesson Looks Like

- 1 Choose a convenient time
- 2 Meet the teacher and explore the instrument
- 3 See how your child responds
- 4 Decide if it feels right

Click here:

Get started with a trial lesson!

Scan here:

Centre Music House is here to support you every step of the way. We believe music education should feel joyful, welcoming, and pressure-free for every family.